THE GRAND JURY CHARGES:

INTRODUCTION

At all times relevant to this Indictment, unless otherwise indicated:

I. The Defendants and Relevant Companies

1. The defendant THOMAS KONTOGIANNIS was a real estate developer who bought, developed and sold properties located primarily in Brooklyn and Queens, New York.

2. KONTOGIANNIS controlled several businesses, including Interamerican Mortgage Corporation, which later became CIP Mortgage Corporation (collectively, "Interamerican/CIP"), Coastal Capital ("Coastal") and Clearview Title Abstract ("Clearview"). Interamerican/CIP and Coastal were mortgage lenders. Clearview was a title insurance agent. KONTOGIANNIS placed family members or other individuals beholden to him in charge of these entities.

3. Loring Estates was a vacant tract of land located in the East New York section of Brooklyn. Between October 2002 and April 2003, KONTOGIANNIS acquired this land through Loring Estates, LLC ("Loring"), an entity he controlled. The City of New York issued building permits for multi-unit housing at Loring Estates in 2002. Construction has yet to be completed on all units.

4. Edgewater Development was a vacant tract of land located in the College Point section of Queens. In June 2001, KONTOGIANNIS acquired this land through Edgewater Development, Inc. ("Edgewater"), an entity he controlled. The City of New York issued building permits for multi-unit housing at Edgewater in 2001. Construction has yet to be completed on all units.

5. The defendant JOHN MICHAEL was KONTOGIANNIS' nephew. MICHAEL was the president of Coastal.

6. The defendant ELIAS APERGIS was KONTOGIANNIS' son-in-law. APERGIS was the president of Bond & Walsh Construction Company, Loring and Edgewater.

7. The defendant STEVEN MARTINI was a real estate appraiser licensed by the State of New York.

8. The defendant TED DOUMAZIOS was the President of Clearview.

9. The defendant STEFAN DELIGIANNIS was an employee of Interamerican/CIP.

10. The defendant NADIA KONSTANTINIDOU was an employee of Interamerican/CIP and later managed numerous entities and bank accounts on behalf of KONTOGIANNIS.

11. The defendant JONATHAN RUBIN worked as a real estate developer and engineer on construction projects for KONTOGIANNIS-controlled entities, including Loring and Edgewater. Among other things, RUBIN applied for permits and work orders from the City of New York.

12. The defendant EDWARD HOGAN was the architect on construction projects for KONTOGIANNIS-controlled entities, including Loring and Edgewater. Among other things, HOGAN submitted maps, plans and building and address applications to the City of New York.

13. KONTOGIANNIS controlled numerous other bank accounts and entities, including Olympicorp International, LLC ("Olympicorp"), Parkview Financial, Inc. ("Parkview") and Brookville Plaza Management, Inc. ("Brookville").

14. Washington Mutual Bank, N.A. ("WAMU") was a financial institution headquartered in Seattle, Washington, the deposits of which were insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

15. DLJ Mortgage Capital, Inc. ("DLJ") was a wholly-owned subsidiary of Credit Suisse U.S.A., Inc. Among other things, DLJ purchased loans from other lending institutions.

II. The Fraudulent Scheme

16. From in or about March 2003 until in or about September 2007, the defendants, together with others, engaged in a scheme to defraud banks and other investors in mortgages by obtaining mortgage loans by fraudulent means in the names of straw buyers.

17. The defendants, together with others, prepared fraudulent documents to facilitate the sales of the mortgage loans into the secondary market, including fraudulent mortgage applications, fraudulent appraisals, and fraudulent title searches. The defendants used some of the properties securing the loans as first-lien security for other loans, meaning the defendants led lenders to believe that their loans were in the first position in the event of default. The lender, either Interamerican/CIP or Coastal, then sold the mortgage loans to investors in the secondary market, often before construction on the properties securing the loans was completed. To prevent the banks from learning that the conspirators had used many of the properties as security for multiple loans, KONTOGIANNIS directed KONSTANTINADOU to make monthly mortgage payments so that the loans would not become delinquent.

18. KONTOGIANNIS used the funds obtained from the sales of the loans to investors in the secondary market to finance construction on the Loring and Edgewater homes, finance construction on other projects, make the monthly mortgage payments for all the loans, and enrich himself and his family.

A. The Fraudulent Loan Applications

19. KONTOGIANNIS recruited straw buyers to pose as purchasers of properties owned by a KONTOGIANNIS-controlled entity such as Loring or Edgewater. KONTOGIANNIS and KONSTANTINADOU selected the property for which the mortgage would apply. The straw buyers included members of KONTOGIANNIS' family; high-ranking members of his organizations, such as DELIGIANNIS, APERGIS, RUBIN and HOGAN; and construction workers and security guards employed by KONTOGIANNIS. KONTOGIANNIS told the straw buyers that he would make monthly mortgage payments and that, if anything went wrong, the house would revert to their ownership. KONTOGIANNIS also told straw buyers that this endeavor would allow them to build their credit. On some occasions, the straw buyers were unaware that the conspirators were using their personal information to apply for a loan. In at least one instance, the conspirators told a straw buyer the documents he was signing were merely to check his credit.

20. KONTOGIANNIS, DELIGIANNIS and others processed the straw buyers' applications through Interamerican/CIP and Coastal. Among the defendants and other conspirators, these loans were known as "Tommy Loans" or "Tommy Files."

21. KONTOGIANNIS instructed DELIGIANNIS or another Interamerican/CIP or Coastal employee to create the appearance that the straw buyers qualified for a loan. Many of the straw buyers lacked sufficient income or assets to qualify for a loan in the amount desired. As a result, DELIGIANNIS or another Interamerican/CIP or Coastal employee would falsify various documents, including employment information and bank statements, in an effort to make the straw borrower appear creditworthy. Eventually, Coastal allowed prospective borrowers to state their income, employment and assets on the loan applications without providing supporting documentation. This change to "no doc" or "stated income" loans relieved the conspirators of the need to create fraudulent employment, income and asset verification documents.

B. The Fraudulent Supporting Documents

22. DOUMAZIOS, through Clearview, provided title reports to Interamerican/CIP or Coastal purportedly to demonstrate that Loring or Edgewater, as the selling entity, had clean title to the property to convey to the buyer. These title reports did not disclose that the properties had pre-existing liens from the other loans the conspirators had obtained. Many of the mortgages were never recorded, thereby enabling the conspirators to mortgage the same property repeatedly.

23. The conspirators inserted checks made payable to Clearview for title insurance into the lenders' loan files to create the appearance that the lenders' interest in the properties securing the loans was protected by title insurance. In most cases, those checks were never cashed, and no title insurance policies were ever issued.

24. MARTINI also prepared fraudulent appraisal reports for the subject properties. The subject properties in many of the transactions were not yet built and, in other transactions, never existed. Nonetheless, MARTINI included in the appraisal reports photographs of fully constructed homes depicting finished interiors and appliances. In some instances, MARTINI placed the names of other appraisers on the reports he prepared without their knowledge or permission.

C. The Fraudulent Down Payments

25. While the closing documentation for the loans showed the borrowers had made down payments, the borrowers did not make any down payments.

D. The Fraudulent Address Shift

26. In an effort to obtain multiple mortgage loans secured by the same properties located at Loring Estates and to conceal their activities, the defendants KONTOGIANNIS and KONSTANTINADOU created fictitious property addresses. For example, if the property located in Loring Estates at 440 Amber Avenue, East New York, Brooklyn had one or two mortgage loans on it already, KONTOGIANNIS and KONSTANTINADOU changed the address to 149-18 78th Street in adjacent Howard Beach, Queens. As with the East New York addresses, MARTINI supplied fraudulent appraisals for the Howard Beach addresses. APERGIS signed fraudulent closing documents to facilitate the multiple sales of these homes. DOUMAZIOS provided title reports demonstrating that Loring had clean title to convey on each property, despite the fact that these new addresses did not exist.

E. Sales Of Loans Into The Secondary Market

27. At KONTOGIANNIS' and MICHAEL's direction, Interamerican/CIP and Coastal sold over $92 million of fraudulent loans to investors in the secondary market. These loans were purchased by WAMU, DLJ and other investors. In connection with these transactions, the fraudulent loan files, which included all of the fraudulent documents discussed herein, were provided to the investors.

28. In an effort to prevent investors from learning of the fraud, KONTOGIANNIS directed KONSTANTINADOU and others to engage in a Ponzi-like scheme in which they made monthly mortgage payments on all outstanding mortgage loans the conspirators sold to the investors by using the proceeds of the sales of other fraudulent loans. KONSTANTINADOU and others continued to make these mortgage payments through Olympicorp, Parkview and Brookville until September 2007.
